

Fable – The Dog and the Wolf. Choose the end.

A wolf, almost dead with hunger, met a house dog on the road. 'Cousin,' said the dog, 'Your wild life will be the ruin of you. Why don't you work steadily for a master like I do? You'll be given food in return for your labour.'

'I would but I can't find any work,' said the wolf.

'No problem,' said the dog. 'Let me sort it out. Work for MY master and you will get some food. Follow me.'

The wolf followed the dog along the road that led to the master's house in town. As they walked, the wolf noticed that the fur around the dog's neck was worn away. 'How did you lose your neck fur?' asked the wolf.

'Oh that's nothing,' said the dog. 'That's the spot where master puts the collar on at night to keep me chained up with the others. It chafes a bit but we get used to it.'

The dog turned to the wolf but the wolf was running in the opposite direction.

Retold by Steve Williams

Which sentence do you most agree with and why?

- Better starve free than be a fat slave.
- He that won't make sacrifices deserves to starve.
- Freedom comes at a cost.
- If slaves said 'No' then there would be no masters and no chains.