

Fable : The Fox and the Grapes. Choose the end

One hot summer's day, a fox was strolling through an orchard. He spotted a bunch of ripe, juicy grapes on a vine that was growing along a high branch.

'Just the thing to quench my thirst,' he said to himself. He stepped back a few paces, looked very determined and took a run, a jump, a leap, but missed the grapes.

He turned around and took a longer run up. He ran, he jumped... And he fell to the ground.

Again and again he tried to reach the grapes but, in the end, he gave up. He walked away muttering to himself: 'I am sure those grapes were sour. I could have got them but I didn't want to waste any more of my valuable time.'

Which sentence do you most agree with and why?

- It is easy to despise what you cannot get.
- Sometimes it is best just to give up.
- It is a good thing not to blame yourself for what you cannot achieve.
- It is better to lie to yourself than feel disappointed.
